When the roses bloom, my love, again,
Then will gladness come once more to me,
For my heart has cold and heavy been,
But thou shall happy be.

When the winter days, so dark and drear,
With their icy boughs are past and gone;
When the balmy springtime days are near,
And lovely flow'rs have come,
Then my tearful longings will be o'er,
And my heart so full, so full of pain.

Then will beat with joy and glee once more,
When the roses bloom, when the roses bloom again,
When winter's gone, and springtime balmy breeze,
Wafts o'er the hill among the verdant trees;
When birds will sing their songs of merry glee,
I'll meet my love when the roses bloom again.

When the zephyrs come and roses bloom,
Then my love, so true comes again to me,
And our hearts, so chill'd by winter's gloom,
Will ever constant be;
When the roses bloom, my love,
Again then will gladness come once more to me,
For my heart has cold and heavy been,
But then shall happy be,
When the roses bloom again,
When the roses bloom again.
